*These animals are used in a safety test as outlined in the CFR 21.610.11.

The material injected subcutaneously has (b)(4) and must be heated to approximately 40°—45° C to facilitate injection into the test animal. This temperature causes discomfort to the animal for the first 24 hours. As requested by the FDA, the use of analgesics or tranquilizers are not allowed to be used because of the possibility of interfering with the results.
